CERTIFICATION MARK

Vélosympathique

Certification Mark Text

Communities and organizations to which the certification is granted and which offer their services in this context commit to promoting cycling as a real option in the context of transport and recreation for all, set specific goals to themselves and equip themselves to achieve them, have a coherent network of cycling amenities, a range of policies and programs, and meet the following requirements: the submission of an application during one of two annual rounds of certification, by filling in an application form organized around five essential tenets demonstrating the concrete measures taken and the projects implemented: A) environment: amenities and equipment that enable cycling, such as: connections to any streets-for-all policies, any cycling-friendly municipal regulations or cycling amenity projects, list of training in the cycling-friendly amenities offered to City staff, percentage of cycling-accessible bridges, tunnels and underpasses, number of parking spaces for bicycles in the community, sorted by type (racks, cases, lockers, street parking, post- or ring-type parking, etc.), number of public buildings equipped with amenities for bicycles, percentage of public transit vehicles (buses, shuttles, ferry boats, etc.) equipped with bicycle racks, total length (in km) of the roadways, amenities for both cyclists and pedestrians, and existing or planned cycling amenities (bicycle paths, designated road space, exclusive paths, sidewalk-level paths, paths on streets, multi-use paths, etc.), policies related to the maintenance of cycling amenities (cleaning, snow removal, pothole repair, etc.), types of amenities at intersections to accommodate cyclists. B) education: programs to promote the safety and comfort of cyclists and other road users, such as: active school transport programs, training in cycling safety and road sharing offered to various road users (cyclists, motorists, bus, taxi and truck drivers). C) encouragement: incentive and promotion measures to invite people to use bicycles, such as: promotion of activities associated with cycling and participation in popular cycling tours, transport challenges, bike months , carless challenges, etc., the number and type of cycling organizations in your community, the number of bicycle retailers in your community, the type of recreational amenities and equipment that can be used for cycling (parks, mountain bike trails, etc.), the name of bicycle rental services or bicycle-sharing systems in your community, the availability of cycling network maps. D) regulatory framework: regulations and programs to hold drivers and cyclists accountable for their actions, the relationship between the police force and the cycling community, specific training for agents on the highway code and how it applies to cyclists, the number of agents that patrol on bicycles, the list of municipal regulations that treat cyclists fairly. E) evaluation and planning: processes that indicate a commitment to measuring results and adopting action plans, such as: the most recent data on cycling commutes in your community, the number of collisions between cyclists and motor vehicles over the past five years, the number of cyclist casualties in accidents with motor vehicles over the past five years, the plan to reduce collisions and casualties and its sources of funding, a study of the economic impact of cycling on the community, the economic development policy focusing on cycling tourism, the efforts made to serve traditionally underserved populations. Applications are evaluated by local evaluators and an expert jury committee. Following this evaluation of the application form using an evaluation grid, a number of points is awarded, corresponding to five, (5) Certification grades, namely diamond, platinum, gold, silver and bronze, corresponding to the level of cycling friendliness, according to the five major evaluation tenets described above. The correspondence between the points awarded and the grade obtained is weighted to account for the specific profile of the organization or community applying for certification, its own characteristics and specificities, namely the age, sector of activity, location and mission of the organization, as well as the population, demography, geography and surface area of the community. Following this evaluation, a feedback report is submitted to the community or organization seeking certification. The certification is granted two months after the application submission deadline for either one of the two certification rounds. Over the certification period, the organization or community commits to a continued process of improvement of its cycling friendliness according to the factors pointed out in the feedback report, through the implementation of concrete actions. The certification must be renewed within three years of obtaining the previous certification. Upon renewal, it is possible to obtain a higher certification grade, to maintain the previous certification grade or to receive a lower certification grade, depending on the evaluation that will be conducted following the same criteria as the ones used in the previous certification.
